Continuation of 11. does NOT place the application in condition for allowance because: Applicant contends that Koehler does not teach a Scotch Yoke slider crank that transmit force between the cam and the drive element as claimed. Examiner disagrees and contends that Kohler does show such Scotch Yoke slider crank. Note that Koehler does teach wherein the piston 26 is connected to the drive unit 22 by a drive element 198 and a Scotch Yoke slider crank 196 provided to transmit force between the cam, e.g. eccentric wheel (not shown numerically) disposed between the crankshaft 204 and crankpin 203. Note that said cam, e.g. eccentric wheel (not shown numerically), drives said crankpin 203 laterally within opening 202 of the drive element 198 (col. 8; lines 58-73).

Applicant also contends that Koehler's piston is not moveable inside a cylinder that is stationary in relation to the piston and the driver. However, it should be noted that Koehler is relied upon to show the use of a Scotch Yoke slider crank to transmit a reciprocation movement to the drive element and piston.
